when 38 year old conner o rourke returns to ireland after an absence of 30 years he is running from his demons his advertising agency in australia is bankrupt his marriage is falling apart and he's hearing poetic voices in his mind telling him to return to inis mor his irish grandmother whom he hasn't spoken to in years has contacted him saying she's critically ill and must speak with him before she dies when he arrives on inis mor a wild windswept rocky little outcrop some 30 miles off the west coast of ireland she has already died leaving him a cottage and a dilapidated old sailing boat that was built by his grandfather a mysterious old seaman appears offering to help him rebuild the boat and as they work together the old man tells conner stories and legends of ireland stories of adventure courage and passion conner is intrigued and inspired by the old man's stories but will he find the courage to follow his own heart the australian irish echo january 2015 a story such as this with elements of the supernatural does not need to follow the laws of logic or of sequence nevertheless it is very much in the tradition of irish storytelling with strong vibrant prose that reminds of writers such as sean o faolain and benedict kiely there is a sympathy and affection for the island people and their lifestyle there is nothing here that is either patronising or condescending indeed the central theme of the book is the contrast between the simplicity of island life and the merciless chase after prosperity in a city such as sydney this is a well written story a reminder of what the irish people lost when they traded their tradition of storytelling and poems for the hunt for money and possessions frank o shea the australian irish echo january 15 2015
